A shameful marker of five years
Indian dubious contribution to a global epidemic of tasteless mob lynchings

The man in whose shoes

India has the dubious distinction of being the country in the world with the highest number of lynchings, and these are not isolated incidents but part of a larger trend. While it is true that lynchings, which account for about 5% of all criminal cases, are rare, they do happen. The problem is that these incidents are often used to deflect attention from the real issues, such as poverty, unemployment, and lack of education. The fact that the banks refused to extend emergency funds to Indian Airlines is evidence of the real problem. The Airlines must take stock of their collective failure to meet their obligations.

The role of the government in this situation is crucial. The government has a responsibility to prevent lynchings and ensure that justice is done. The government should take a firm stand against lynchings and ensure that the perpetrators are punished.

The government should also take steps to provide alternative solutions to the problems that lead to lynchings. For example, it could provide funds for education and job training programs. It could also provide incentives for businesses to hire people from the affected communities.

In conclusion, the government should take a strong stand against lynchings and ensure that justice is done. The government should also take steps to provide alternative solutions to the problems that lead to lynchings.

Gandhi's last words

Gandhi's last words are a reminder of the importance of non-violence in politics. The same message applies today, as we witness the rise of extreme nationalism and violence in various parts of the world. It is important to remember that violence is never the answer, and that we should always strive for peace and dialogue.

In conclusion, Gandhi's last words are a reminder of the importance of non-violence in politics, and we should always strive for peace and dialogue.

Airlines must take stock of their collective plight and sell seats at the real cost

The long line of private airline carcasses dotting the horizon may soon be joined by another. Jet Airways announced a suspension of all operations on May 21, just months after it secured a cash infusion from its lenders as a lifeline to keep the company afloat. The airline had to pare down its services and cut jobs as it struggled to turn around its finances. Despite the lifeline, the airline has been unable to sustain operations and the airline is left with little option but to wind up its operations.

The airline's troubles stem from a combination of factors, including a steep drop in fuel prices, which has increased the airline's costs. The airline has also been unable to attract enough passengers to offset the high costs of operation. The airline's financial problems have been exacerbated by the global pandemic, which has hit the travel industry hard.

In conclusion, the airline industry is facing a challenging time, and airlines must take a hard look at their operations and costs. They must also consider ways to attract more passengers to offset high costs.

In this election season, it is imperative for forward-looking parties to talk about pollution

Suresh Prabhu and Harsha Bhogle

The National Capital Region's polluted air has killed millions every year. Every October, at least 15,000 people die due to the air quality. From Delhi to Patiala and Haripur, every village has a different story. The winter season brings increase in air pollution. Despite this alarming level of pollution, neither the Union government, the AAP, nor the State governments have shown any interest in solving the problem. The Delhi government has proposed a step to plug out air pollution. Even the national government has proposed a program to control air pollution. However, these steps have not been implemented effectively.

The government needs to take more steps to control pollution. Each politician should take the responsibility to control pollution. They should enforce strict rules and regulations to control pollution. The government should also focus on the long-term solution to control pollution. They should plant more trees, use clean energy, and reduce the use of fossil fuels.

The government should also focus on the education of the public about pollution. They should educate people about the consequences of pollution. The government should also provide incentives to the businesses that use clean energy.
