The man who hated to fly

Naresh Goyal would get nervous and pray each time a flight took off. Now, there’s no Air India and nowhere to go!

His father had been a plumber for the East India Company. An Irishman, his mother (whom he called ‘Mother’) was a Bengali. He was brought up in a household where every day was a foundation for citizenship training.

Modi out to conquer his Jingostan

Modi–Shah BIP has resurrected dangers and the enemy from the past and built a scarily nimble Jingostan. It’s a great diversionary tactic but history shows it never ends well.

Down the primrose path

The Association for Democratic Reform's 230 candidates (14 per cent of the total) as the final third phase of polling has set the stage for a historic election in which voters will have to choose between economic growth and political stability. With the country's economy in the doldrums, and public tolerance of corruption reaching a new low, the outcome of the election will be crucial for India's future. The election, which began on February 16, is likely to be the most important since 1957.

The saffron is not courted, and not on balay grounds. The saffron is not courted, and not on balay grounds.

The election has long been plagued by poor performance, with more than 1,200 college campuses having been shut down in recent years. NOAH SMITH, a member of the Parliament of India, has been accused of making false statements about the government's performance. His nomination as a candidate has been questioned by several political parties, including the Congress.

The 1,200 campuses were shut down by the government, which cited the need to curb left-wing extremism and ensure the safety of students. However, many students and educators believe that the government's actions were motivated by a desire to suppress political dissent and control the narrative around the election.

The election is also marked by a significant increase in the use of social media for political campaigning. Platforms like Twitter and Facebook have become key battlegrounds for political parties, and candidates are increasingly relying on these platforms to reach voters.

The election is expected to be a close fight, with several key battlegrounds poised to decide the outcome. The Congress, which has traditionally been a major force in Indian politics, will be hoping to make a comeback in the election, while the Bharatiya Janata Party (BJP) is expected to continue its dominance in the country.

The election will also have significant implications for India's foreign policy, with the government expected to continue its initiative of 'Sabka saath sabka vikas'. This initiative aims to provide a safety net for all, including the most vulnerable sections of society, and has been widely praised for its success.

The government has also been working to improve its image on the international stage, with several high-profile visits by the Prime Minister. These efforts are expected to continue during the election, with a focus on highlighting India's achievements and its role as a global player.

The election will also mark the beginning of a new era in Indian politics, with several key figures stepping down after serving their terms. This includes the outgoing Prime Minister, who is expected to be replaced by a new leader.

The election will also have significant implications for India's economy, with several key economic indicators expected to be released in the coming months. The government is expected to continue its focus on economic growth and development, with several key measures expected to be announced in the coming months.

Overall, the election is expected to be a significant event in Indian politics, with several key issues and challenges expected to be addressed.

The future of TV

The entertainment industry has managed to continue to thrive despite the COVID-19 pandemic. With the release of several high-profile shows, the industry has managed to maintain its momentum.

Walt Disney, for example, has continued to release new content, including shows like Disney+ and Hulu. The company has also expanded its streaming platform, which now includes several popular series.

Netflix, on the other hand, has continued to release new content, including shows like Stranger Things and The Witcher.
