The THE TRADE BETWEEN the two parts of Jammu and Kashmir, across the Line of Control (LoC), which started in 2002, was stopped last week. The suspension of the cross-LoC trade, announced by the Prime Minister on November 16, is part of a larger change in the strategy for dealing with Kashmir at the policy level. It is no longer about de-escalation and force, but more often about border checks and surveillance. This could be the beginning of an effort to control the flow of people and goods across the LoC.

Through the trade, the northern parts of Kashmir, which are part of Pakistan, are able to sell large quantities of goods across the LoC. But there is a lot of uncertainty about what will happen next.

With the suspension, the cross-LoC trade has been stopped. The trade route, which was opened in 2002, has been closed. The authorities have not yet announced any plans for reopening it. The suspension is likely to have a major impact on the economy of the northern parts of Kashmir, which rely on the trade for their livelihood.

The suspension of the trade is likely to have serious implications for the economy of the northern parts of Kashmir. The trade route has been a lifeline for the region, providing an important source of income and employment for the local population. The suspension could lead to a decline in the local economy, affecting the livelihoods of thousands of people.

The suspension of the trade is also likely to have political implications. The trade route has been a symbol of the Indian government's commitment to the region, and its suspension could be seen as a sign of the government's disinterest in the region. The suspension could also be seen as a sign of the government's inability to control the situation in the region.

The suspension of the trade is likely to have implications for the wider region as well. The trade route has been a key factor in the regional economy, and its suspension could have ripple effects throughout the region. The suspension could also lead to a decline in the region's economic prospects, affecting the livelihoods of people throughout the region.

In conclusion, the suspension of the cross-LoC trade is likely to have serious implications for the economy of the northern parts of Kashmir, as well as for the wider region. The Indian government should take all necessary steps to ensure that the livelihoods of people in the region are not affected, and that the region's economic prospects are not undermined.

The big lesson from the cross-LoC trade experiment is that symbols should not be given up on easily. While it was a major step, and a step towards the resolution of the impending issue, that objective in itself is far from achieved. Stable trade should not be a political act, but trading should not be a political act as well. In conclusion, if there is a lesson to be learnt from this, it is that trade being called political acts.
