ARDUNI INJURO has written a non-fictional book, "Wildlife and the Heart," in which she says that animals have feelings similar to humans. In a recent interview, she stated that wildlife is a source of emotional richness for humans and a way to connect with nature. The book, published by Bahasa, has been widely praised for its insights into the emotional lives of animals.

In the interview, Ardyni discussed the importance of understanding animals and their emotions, as well as the significance of protecting the natural world. She emphasized the need for humans to view nature as a source of emotional richness and to cultivate a deeper connection with the natural world.

"Wildlife and the Heart" is a poignant reminder of the emotional richness that can be found in the natural world. It is a book that invites readers to reflect on their own emotional well-being and to consider the importance of fostering a deeper connection with nature.

In the interview, Ardyni discussed the emotional lives of animals and the significance of protecting the environment.

Interviewer: How does understanding the emotional lives of animals help us in our own emotional well-being?

Ardyni Injuro: Understanding the emotional lives of animals is crucial for our own emotional well-being. Animals experience emotions like fear, joy, and love, just as we do. By connecting with the emotional lives of animals, we can learn to be more empathetic and compassionate towards ourselves and others.

Interviewer: What role does protecting the natural world play in emotional well-being?

Ardyni Injuro: Protecting the natural world is essential for emotional well-being. The natural world provides a sense of serenity and calmness that is beneficial for our emotional health. By preserving the natural world, we can preserve the emotional richness that it offers.

Interviewer: What advice would you give to readers who want to connect with nature?

Ardyni Injuro: I would advise readers to spend time in nature, whether it be in a park or a forest. By connecting with nature, we can experience the emotional richness that it offers and cultivate a deeper sense of empathy and compassion.

When children walk with fear

Over five years, the BJP has consistently sought to marginalise Muslims.
