Quota call in contact jobs

BASANT KUMAR MISHRA

The Central University of Rajasthan has tightened its grip on the quota system by issuing a circular that allows only SC/ST students to apply for the reserved posts in the university. The move has drawn criticism from students and faculty members.

The university has issued a directive stating that only students from SC/ST categories will be considered for reserved posts in the university. The directive, which was issued on Monday, is said to have been implemented in response to a recent Supreme Court order.

The directive states that the university will only consider the applications of students from SC/ST categories for the reserved posts. The move is likely to affect hundreds of students who had applied for the reserved posts in previous years.

The students and faculty members have condemned the move, saying it is discriminatory and goes against the spirit of affirmative action.

The students and faculty members have urged the university to rescind the directive and implement the Supreme Court order, which allows for reservation in a manner that is proportionate to the population of SC/ST categories in the country.

The university has also been criticized for not consulting with the students and faculty members before implementing the directive. The students and faculty members have said that the university should have held a meeting to discuss the matter before implementing the directive.

The students and faculty members have also urged the government to intervene and ensure that the reservation system is implemented in a manner that is fair and equitable.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT

New Delhi: Business confidence in India has been turning nosedown for the first time in over a decade. The latest National Institute of Public Finance and Policy’s Business Confidence Index (BCI) developed by the National Council of Applied Economic Research – the Delhi-based economic policy research and microeconomic think- tank – doesn’t bode well for policy reading.

The NCAER’s measure of business confidence shows that the index has tumbled to 117.2 in September, down 2.5 points from year-earlier levels. During October 2018, the index stood at 121.6.

According to the survey, most among the two dozen industries and services examined, the two dozen industries and services examined, the three major sectors of manufacturing, services and construction are all witnessing a decline in business optimism.

The index is computed on the basis of responsesto four questions. These are the four regions of India: Delhi NCR which representsthe North; Rajasthan & Madhya Pradesh which reflect the West; Maharashtra, Gujarat, Tamil Nadu & Karnataka which are part of the South; and Jammu & Kashmir, Punjab, Haryana, Chandigarh, Himachal Pradesh, Uttarakhand and the North-East which together constitute the East.

The index is a medium-term indicator of economic activity and the levels are calculated as a percentage of enterprises that expect growth, compared with those that expect decline in the same period. A higher figure indicates greater optimism among enterprises.

In the present series, the index of manufacturing sector was at 75.5, down 11.5 points from the August reading.

In the construction sector, the index also fell to 79.6, down 12.4 points from the previous month’s 92.

In the services sector, the index was at 124.7, down 11.5 points from 136.2.

According to the report, “As expected, business confidence has declined in all the regions for the period under study. This is especially true for the manufacturing and construction sectors. The manufacturing index has tumbled from 113.3 to 75.5, the lowest level since the index was first released in January 2010.”

While the manufacturing confidence index has fallen into a bearish zone in the present series, it has been above the 100 mark all through 2017, the report highlights. The services sector, which has never been a worry area in the past, also witnessed a fall to 124.7, the lowest since the index was first released in 2010.

Predictably, the confidence level in the services sector also fell to 79.6, the lowest since the index was first released in 2010.

For construction sector, which has been a worry area for some time, the confidence index has fallen from 136.2 to 92, a fall of 12.4 points from the August reading, the report highlights.

It highlights the possibility that the manufacturing sector, which has been a source of support for the economy, may be “laying the ground for a future slowdown.”

The overall index, which is a weighted average of the four regions, had stood at 116.1 in August and stood at 117.2 in September.

BEING COMPETENT AND COMPETITIVE

India has the largest talent pool in the world, and more aspirants are added to the job market every year. This makes having clear aspirations, the will to succeed, and being persistent the ideal attributes to build a successful career.

To get the basics right, it is important to explore curricular opportunities and settle down with a career of academic pursuits. From there on, it becomes easy for students to focus on a particular stream and work towards fulfilling their goals.

So come with clear directions: the educational system as a diverse set of aspirations through the provision of various courses, complemented by flexible government policies ensure that students remain on track to being competent and competitive.

Being competent

So what does being competent mean? In essence, it involves a combination of effective training to gain the requisite knowledge for building skills that will make you job ready with experience.

Competence,岗! Let’s break down each component to understand what competency means.

Firstly, it is important to have a proper plan of action in relation to your studies. It can also be a combination of streams if you are unsure. Therefore, studying science with Computer Science can also be an option if you have the inclination and aptitude for both.

Once you have cleared this hurdle of identifying your career goals, you are set to becoming competent for achieving the same. Educational institutes today are investing massive resources in providing the best training and knowledge facilities to students in their quest of building their careers.

This includes having compact classes for effective participation and retention, the provision of laboratory and related facilities, and world-class faculty which will kindle the student’s passion to explore their potential. Moreover, the curriculum designed is such that it ensures a stimulating educational environment.

Thus, students are allowed to participate in on-field training where they get various exposures and learn the ropes on the go.

This is the ideal building competency, where students inculcate a strong academic base to commit the foundations of their career.

Being competitive

What is competition? You would picture a race now in your head where racing by two pages after page and then bursting out in the examination is what defines it.

But not being competitive is much worse than simply the urge to come first. It is necessary to have the necessary knowledge, skill, and experience which will set you apart from the others and create your own niche to succeed.

Being competent and competitive goes hand-in-hand. If you are competent, you would explore other possibilities and avenues to gain knowledge. This would also involve going beyond the book and exploring the subject in depth. This could be through taking up projects, researching online journals, reading up on supplementary material, and the like.

Another aspect of being competitive is frequently ignored by students is not staying ahead of development. Competition beyond their coursework, being world-wide when it comes to gaining knowledge will automatically make you competitive.

So come with dreams, and when it comes to enhancing your prowess, leave no stone unturned to get to the bottom of the stream and reach our to great and never to dream more. This will build on your competitive abilities where you would compete with yourself and focus on boosting yourself. This will also become an opening scope in class.

Overall, being competent and competitive, and utilizing your power and giving wings to all your dreams.

Revising Biswa Shakti Tax

Nirupam Sen writes about the need for revising the Biswa Shakti Tax, which was introduced in 2011. The tax was aimed at providing a source of revenue for the state government. However, the tax has been criticized for its negative impact on the economy and the state's fiscal burden.

Sealdah: A portion of APC Road near the Sealdah flyover caved in on Monday, possibly after an underground sewer line collapsed.

An 80-metre stretch on one flank of the busy road had to be closed to traffic, leading to snarls on Monday morning. A portion of the connecting sewer line collapsed, causing sewage to leak and enter the soil. This may have triggered the subsidence, said a senior official of the Calcutta Municipal Corporation (CMC).

The official said efforts were being made to fix the leak by Tuesday morning, after which the road would be restored. “There are two parallel sewer lines, one bigger than the other. There is also a third sewer line called the rider line that connects the first two lines. A portion of this connecting sewer line collapsed,” said the official.

“The sewer line has collapsed, possibly due to pressure. The affected stretch is near the northern end of the flyover,” he said. The cause of the collapse will be determined after the affected stretch is completed.

The official said efforts were being made to fix the leak after which the road would be restored. “The area is heavily congested with vehicles. We are trying our best to maintain traffic,” he said.

The collapse of the sewer line led to snarls on Monday morning. Sealdah-bound buses had to be stopped on a long stretch of APC Road to ease the traffic.

Tuesday being a public holiday for Guru Nanak Jayanti could mean fewer traffic snarls.

MOODY BLUES

T he Narendra Modi government has reacted with characteristic petulance after the credit rating agency downgraded India’s sovereign rating to Baa2 by Moody’s Investors Service, trimming its outlook on India’s sovereign rating to “negative” from “stable”. The agency also downgraded India’s foreign-currency and local-currency long-term sovereign ratings to Baa2 and Ba1, respectively, and lowered its long-term foreign-currency issuer rating to Ba2. The report is in line with Moody’s low opinion on the Indian government’s willingness to address fiscal imbalances and contain inflationary pressures.

The downgrade comes at a time when India is in the midst of a slowdown in economic growth. The government has been under pressure to take action to revive the economy, which has grown at a slow pace in recent years. The downgrade will make it more difficult for India to access international capital markets and could lead to higher borrowing costs.

Despite the government’s efforts to improve the fiscal position, Moody’s believes that the country’s economic potential is still intact. The agency notes that India’s large and diversified market provides a strong foundation for growth in the long run.

However, Moody’s cautions that the government’s commitment to fiscal discipline is crucial for sustaining growth. The agency expects the government to make progress in reducing the fiscal deficit in the coming years.

Overall, the report highlights the need for the government to take bold actions to address the country’s economic challenges and improve the fiscal position.

The Thin Edge

RUCHI JOSHI

The severity of the problem of air pollution is not only well documented but also difficult to ignore. The problem is accentuated by the fact that it is not only a local problem but also has global implications. The air we breathe is not just a matter of personal health but also affects the health of the entire planet.

The Indian government has taken several steps to address the problem of air pollution. However, the effectiveness of these measures is questionable. The government needs to take more concrete steps to reduce air pollution and ensure a healthy environment for all.

Balancing act

In a time when long working hours have become the norm, the World Health Organization (WHO) has pointed out that long hours are not equal to high productivity. For people, the feeling of doing a lot can sometimes be a source of stress.

A study published in the Journal of Applied Psychology found that people who work longer hours are more likely to experience stress, anxiety, and burnout. The study also found that people who work longer hours are less likely to engage in leisure activities, social activities, and exercise.

The study suggests that people should aim for a healthy work-life balance. People should try to limit their working hours and engage in activities that promote their well-being.

In conclusion, air pollution is a major health concern in India. The government needs to take immediate action to address this problem. The government should focus on reducing emissions and improving air quality in urban areas.

The government should also promote public transportation and encourage people to use it. People should also be encouraged to use cleaner fuels, such as solar or electric, for their transportation needs.

In addition, people should be encouraged to use renewable energy sources, such as solar or wind, for their electricity needs. The government should also invest in research and development to find new and better ways to reduce air pollution.
